Adjusting Carburetor, Plugs, Saves Gasoline

Tractor Engines Should Run at Top Efficiency

With the gasoline situation becoming increasingly serious due to demands for gas for combat uses, farmers are being asked by the War Food Administration to cut their use of tractor fuel to a minimum.

While this request may seem extreme to farmers who have had their tractors stranded now and then by dried-up fuel tanks, W. C. Krueger, extension agricultural engineer at Rutgers University, points out that many tractors could be operated on 15 to 25 per cent less fuel through correct carburetor adjustment, lubrication, and proper setting of spark plugs and magnets.

He emphasizes that when it takes 100 to 180 gallons of fuel to plow a 40-acre field, 40 to 50 gallons less fuel, 60 to 80 to haul a grain drill over it and 30 to 50 gallons to harrow it, a 25 per cent reduction in fuel becomes important.

He says that the following suggestions for improving tractor efficiency:

1. It is a common error to believe that the leaner the mixture the less fuel is consumed. In fact, a mixture that is too lean causes over-heating, wastes fuel, causes over-burning, and causes valve trouble. Best fuel economy results from setting carburetor at a compromise between too lean a mixture for idling and a slightly rich mixture representing maximum power adjustment. This setting can only be determined by trial under load.

2. Magneto timing is often responsible for over-heating and unnecessary oil consumption. Since the method of setting varies with different models, follow the instruction book closely.

3. Set spark plug and magnet point gaps to recommended clearance occasionally. Put in new plugs when electrodes become worn.

4. Check valve tappets two or three times a season. Improper clearance runs more valves than all other causes put together.

5. Never shut off a tractor immediately after running at full load. Valve warping is often caused by not letting the tractor cool down a short time before stopping so that the valves may cool gradually.

6. Operate the tractor at full load as much of the time as possible. It costs nearly half as much to iddle a tractor at half load as it does at full load. Maximum draw-bar efficiency occurs when the load is heavy enough to cause wheel slip in field operations approximately 10 per cent.
